Alumni Spotlight: Wayne Outten ’70
When Wayne Outten was a high school student, like many, he didn't know what he wanted to do after graduation.

"I was a science and math whiz in high school and my teachers told me I should be an engineer," he said. "I thought, 'Sure, what do I know?'"

Wayne enrolled at Drexel after being accepted into an elite engineering fellowship after high school. Unfortunately, it didn't take long for Wayne to realize that his high school teachers were wrong.

"I hated engineering; I just had nothing in common with my classmates," he said, noting that he was far more interested in politics than his protractor. More

Call for Volunteers

Washington D.C. Area Panel Discussion
The Drexel University Alumni Association and the Washington D.C. Area Alumni Club are putting together an Alumni Career Services panel discussion, focusing on entrepreneurship. We are seeking panelists with experience in this topic, including those who have worked for the General Services Administration and Small Business Administration, who can provide insight into the process of starting a small business in the D.C. area and what entrepreneurs can do to market their businesses to the federal government. We are also seeking panelists who work for organizations that contract with small businesses for services and can provide insight into what they look for when doing so. If you are interested in serving as a panelist, please contact Lauren Villanueva ’04, ’09, at alumni@drexel.edu or call 1-888-DU-GRADS.

Young Alumni and Recent Graduates
The Drexel University Alumni Association is seeking volunteers for an Alumni Career Services program especially for young alumni and recent graduates. We are looking for alumni who have insight and expertise to share on career development topics that are of the greatest concern to this group. For example, what are some strategies for getting the most out of your first job? What do you do if you hate your first job out of college? What do you need to know if you are considering graduate school? What are some tips for networking as a recent graduate? Please contact Lauren Villanueva ’04, ’09, at alumni@drexel.edu or call 1-888-DU-GRADS.
