Drexel to receive $45 million gift for new center for business school

By Susan Snyder
Inquirer Staff Writer

Drexel University on Tuesday morning will announce a whopping $45 million gift from corporate executive and alumnus Bennett S. LeBow for a new academic center for its business school, which already bears his name.

It's Drexel's largest gift from a single donor and the 12th largest to be made to a U.S. business school, Drexel officials said.

At a cost of $92 million, the spacious, 12-story limestone-and-glass building is to open in 2014, consolidating Drexel's four business school buildings into one. It will allow enrollment in the business school to grow by about 500 students, to 4,100, president John A. Fry said in an interview.

Situated at 32d and Market Streets, the building will be Drexel's most expensive to date - more than the $60 million integrated sciences building to be named after the late Drexel president Constantine Papadakis - and serving as "the entrance to the heart of the university," Fry said.

The announcement comes just 31/2 months into Fry's tenure. While Fry closed the deal, the project had been in the works for several years and was cultivated by Papadakis.

"This is phenomenal for Drexel," Fry said. "It's a very confident statement about Drexel's future."

LeBow, a 1960 electrical engineering graduate, said he was pleased with the business school's progress since he made his initial $10 million donation in 1999 and the school was named after him.

The growing business school has launched full-time, online, and corporate MBA programs and has been ranked among the top 100 in the U.S. News & World Report rankings. Four-year undergraduate tuition, which includes a co-op experience, is $38,000 per year; the one year MBA program tuition is $57,000.

LeBow called his initial gift "the best investment I ever made."

His $45 million gift is the largest he's ever given to any entity.

"They've been doing a great job of it, and I want to keep it going," said LeBow, a West Philadelphia native who chairs the board of the international bookseller Borders Group, based in Ann Arbor, Mich.

LeBow made his reputation as a turnaround specialist, investing in struggling companies as wide-ranging as jewelry, real estate, and sports collectibles. He also chairs the board of Vector Group Ltd., a private-equity firm focused on real estate and tobacco products.

LeBow, 72, of Miami, is Drexel's largest benefactor and credits the university with giving him his start. He enrolled in the school's co-op program, which allowed him to work while attending school.

"I couldn't afford to go anywhere else," he said. "Drexel is my alma mater. It got me going on everything."

LeBow is to be on campus Tuesday morning for the announcement.

The new building will feature a finance trading lab, a 300-seat auditorium, a five-story atrium, areas for experiential learning and business consulting, videoconferencing, and a recording studio to support online programs, Drexel officials said.

The building will "allow our students to learn in a setting that is less like a classroom and more like the corporate environment," said George P. Tsatsos, dean of the business school.

It will replace the aging Matheson Hall, built in 1965, which is slated for demolition late next summer.
Drexel to receive $45 million gift for new center for business school

http://www.philly.com/inquirer/local/20101116_Drexel_to_receive_45...
Drexel to receive $45 million gift for new center for business school | Philadelphia Daily News

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>User</th>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Text</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>USAFirst1</td>
<td>11/16/2010 09:21 AM</td>
<td>drexel is over-priced. period.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ErinnInTheCity</td>
<td>11/16/2010 09:38 AM</td>
<td>@Miss M. I agree about the look of the building. It's bright and large but it looks very plain. One of the issues I always had with campus was all the new construction projects were different modern styles. They not only clashed with each other but also with the historic buildings that have been around for years. @observer I think when that building blocking Woodland is finished, there will be access again. Obviously with the construction everything is blocked off but if I remember correctly, there will be a walkway through there. As it stands now it is also blocking off the quad from other parts of campus.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SanFran_Champs</td>
<td>11/16/2010 10:03 AM</td>
<td>GREED IS GOOD.... GOD BLESS AMERICA AND WALL STREET AS WELL....</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>swimfishie</td>
<td>11/16/2010 10:07 AM</td>
<td>&quot;The donation makes it possible for the college to buy and renovate two buildings for the College of Arts and Design.&quot; It's The Antoinette Westphal College of Media Arts and Design - not to be confused with The College of Arts and Sciences. Do your research! It would be nice to see some money go into helping alumni who are out of work find new jobs. As a Drexel Alumnus who has earned an undergrad as well as two graduate degrees from the university, the career services offered are extremely poor. More focus is on current undergrad and graduate students along with international students, rather than alumni who contribute the sum of gifts to continue the growth of the university. The economy has been the worse it has been in decades. You would think Drexel would do SOMETHING to help their out of work alumni, especially those who have been out of work two and three years.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>stinkbugboy</td>
<td>11/16/2010 10:15 AM</td>
<td>SanFran: Spoken like the liberal loser you are</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Monk</td>
<td>11/16/2010 10:31 AM</td>
<td>I applaud the generosity of Mr. LeBow, but wish he had left this money for the engineers at Drexel rather than the MBA's. Look at what the graduates from Wharton and Harvard did for the world. We need engineers and scientists FAR more than we need accountants and actuaries. That's not sour grapes or liberalism...that's common sense.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

13 comments

Register to comment
Why are we asking you to register? We've made some changes to increase the quality of the user experience and dialogue, and reduce the number of inappropriate or offensive posts. You're now required to have a registered username and account before adding a comment. This will improve the experience for everyone. We apologize for the inconvenience. Join the conversation!

Already Registered? Sign In

Email address
Password
SIGN IN
Forgot Password?