

HISTORY

Both our BA and BS programs apply the experiential, research-intensive approach of Drexel University to the discipline of history. Original research is the centerpiece of our curriculum, and students learn to research and write history by using the extensive historical resources of Philadelphia. As a Drexel University department, we also have strengths in the history of science and technology. What is that subfield of history about? We explain the development and adoption of science and technologies in the rich historical context of culture and politics.

The Department offers both a Bachelor of Science (BS) and a Bachelor of Arts (BA) in History.

The Bachelor of Arts program provides a more flexible course of study, which includes a foreign-language requirement, and allows for options in the fulfillment of humanities, social science, math, and science requirements.

The Bachelor of Science program provides a framework for those students who prefer a more specific course plan of study, including required sequences in both mathematics and the natural sciences, as well as courses in economics and statistics.

Students wanting specific information about the major are encouraged to stop by the Department of History and Politics located at 3250-60 Chestnut Street, Suite 3025, call the department at 215.895.2463, or visit their website at drexel.edu/histpol.
