

PROPERTY MANAGEMENT

The property management industry employs 297,000 in management and has an expected job growth of 12% by 2022. As this growth continues, the role of the property manager is becoming increasingly complex, leading to a demand for more experienced and better-educated professionals.

Drexel's B.S. in Property Management program provides the interdisciplinary education needed to succeed in the challenging and dynamic field of real estate management. The curriculum includes a foundation in general education and social science, specialized study in property management and construction management, and advanced knowledge of real estate, business and property law, presentation and promotion, accounting, and finance.

With executives from highly-regarded and successful companies in the Philadelphia region and beyond, the Property Management Industry Advisory Board provides also valuable curriculum insight and supports the continued success of the Property Management program.

A degree in property management prepares students for careers in land development, acquisitions, asset management, advertising and marketing, commercial lending, facilities and property management, as well as other property management-related careers in the public and private sectors. Available co-ops provide experiential learning, which prepare students to enter a variety of careers within real estate management. There are a very limited number of property management degree and certificate programs available worldwide. Drexel graduates are strategically prepared for real estate management careers and poised for success.

Students wanting specific information about the major are encouraged to stop by the department office in One Drexel Plaza, Suite 100, call the department at 215.571.3939, or visit their website at drexel.edu/engmgmt/propmgt.
