

HISTORY

The history program reflects the strengths of Drexel University, including specialization in transnational history and in the history of science, technology, and the environment. A series of required courses in history build skills in research and interpretation of the past while elective courses within and outside the history program allow students to shape the curriculum to meet their needs and interests.

The Bachelor of Arts provides a course of study that includes foreign language courses and a broad grounding in the liberal arts, with flexibility for students to choose courses to fulfill humanities, social science, math, and science requirements that will contribute to their overall educational and career plans.

Students interested in specific information about the major are encouraged to stop by the Department of History, located at 3250-60 Chestnut Street, Suite 3025, call 215.895.2463, or visit drexel.edu/history.
