

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEMS

The Management Information Systems (MIS) major program involves the managing of people and systems related to information technology. The goal of the MIS major is to integrate both areas of expertise and apply the power of technology to solving business problems.

The MIS major prepares students for a variety of opportunities in the information technology field and business. These opportunities include careers as managers of computer service units or staff members supporting computer-using organizations. The program focuses on a mix of applied computer systems content, interpersonal interaction, and a practical business orientation that produces graduates who bridge the gap between technical knowledge and business functions.
