

PSYCHOLOGY

Drexel University's Department of Psychology is a tightknit active community of internationally known faculty and impressive student scholars.

Undergraduate and graduate students work alongside faculty on cutting-edge research and clinical projects in a range of areas, including health, forensics, neuropsychology, cognitive, human experimental, and clinical psychology. Undergraduates also benefit from Drexel's cooperative education program, gaining hands-on extensive work experience in areas of their interest.

Our new Psychological Services Center (PSC) is a clinic that provides high-quality hands-on training for our clinical psychology doctoral students and allows us to offer cutting-edge, scientifically informed, and affordable treatments to residents of Philadelphia and the surrounding areas.

Located in the newly renovated Stratton Hall, the department features state-of-the-art research labs, a clinical training clinic, faculty offices, meeting rooms, and informal gathering spaces for faculty, students, and professional staff.

Psychology majors are able to take advantage of both the undergraduate and graduate opportunities at Drexel by applying to the Accelerated BS/MS in Psychology.

Students interested in specific information about the major are encouraged to stop by the department office at 3201 Chestnut Street, Stratton Hall, 2nd Floor, or visit drexel.edu/psychology.
