

PUBLIC HEALTH

The bachelor of science degree in public health will allow Drexel University undergraduate students the opportunity to expand learning opportunities within both Dornsife School of Public Health (SPH) and the College of Arts and Sciences and gain exposure to public health at an undergraduate level.

Reflecting the interdisciplinary approach of the SPH, students declaring the major will take courses originating from the various public health core disciplines, which include epidemiology, community health and prevention, environmental and occupational health, and health management and policy. Students will also participate in a public health-oriented co-op experience, as well as a capstone course in their senior year.

The diversity in course offerings provides the students with the general foundations of each discipline within public health. As the students progress through the major, they will be able to gain more breath and depth in the specific discipline of their choosing through the co-op experience as well as the capstone in their senior year.

Students in the public health major have significant opportunities to travel abroad for short- or long-term work and study. For more information, visit the SPH website at drexel.edu/dornsife/global/dornsife-scholars.
