

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

The Drexel University Communication, Culture and Media (CCM) graduate programs create new areas of interdisciplinary inquiry and educate emerging scholars who pursue bold, original and socially meaningful research. The program is highly interdisciplinary, drawing from the fields of communication, sociology, anthropology and linguistics, emphasizing the integration of theory and practice. Upon graduation, students are prepared to address complex social issues through innovative research and scholarship.

The PhD degree program is highly collegial, and students are regarded as junior colleagues. The master's degree provides excellent preparation for students interested in pursuing a doctoral program in the future while also gaining critical academic and communicative skills that are in high demand across a variety of media communication roles.

DEGREE OFFERED

Master of Science (MS), Doctor of Philosophy (PhD)

GRADUATE ACTIVITIES/EVENTS

PhD students are regularly invited to participate in ongoing faculty projects and may also develop their own original research projects with faculty support and mentorship. The department is home to an active doctoral student association which consistently places student representatives on important faculty committees. All CCM students are invited and encouraged to attend events taking place as part of the CCM colloquia series.
