

Criminology and Justice Studies (BS)

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Imagine a career where you can make a real difference in your community by using cutting-edge tools to solve crimes and create safer neighborhoods. The Bachelor of Science degree in Criminology and Justice Studies from Drexel University allows you to do all of this and more.

Our program isn't just about learning underlying theory - it's about getting hands-on experience with the latest technology used in the field. You'll master state-of-the-art analytics tools like Geographic Information Systems (GIS) to pinpoint crime hotspots and food deserts, while developing strategies to increase access to housing, education and healthcare - all foundational components of thriving communities.

And the best part? You can customize your education to match your passions. Interested in crime prediction? Social and restorative justice? Go for it! At Drexel, you'll gain a solid foundation in criminal justice while exploring the areas that excite you the most.

Our alumni work in policing, intelligence, crime analysis, legal services, and more.

INNOVATIVE CURRICULUM

Criminology and Justice Studies is designed for students who wish to study crime, crime causation and society's response to crime. It includes courses that focus on the primary theories of crime, such as those that ask: Why are certain neighborhoods or individuals more likely than others to experience, or participate in, crime? While the core curriculum provides a strong foundation in criminology and criminal justice, it also includes courses of study that allow students to explore specific topics related to justice, crime science and forensics.

Many of the courses in the department are "place-based" and "justice focused" in that they explore the social, economic, health and environmental risk factors beyond the traditional boundaries of the criminal justice system to explain crime. With emphases on engaged learning, global opportunities and data-driven problem-solving, Criminology and Justice Studies gives students the tools they need to practice "justice" across a wide spectrum of fields, extending well beyond the historic focus of criminal justice degrees.

Students in Criminology and Justice Studies are educated in the substance of criminology and justice while being trained in the tools of crime science to enter the workforce with skills that our data-driven economy will immediately value. This major offers a flexible plan of study, allowing students to easily double major, take on minors and complete the science requirements for future study in forensic science.

The JUSTICE STUDIES MINOR is an interdisciplinary course of study that allows students to focus on social justice issues related to health, housing, education, and the environment, while also ensuring that students take courses that teach them how to map social inequities across physical space.

The CRIME ANALYSIS & DIGITAL INVESTIGATIONS MINOR focuses on the analytics of crime and data-driven investigations through recognizing the importance of "big data" in the commission, detection and prevention of crime as well as identification of those responsible for criminal acts. Students seeking careers in criminal justice, defense, and intelligence will benefit from this minor.

BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

COMMUNITY-BASED LEARNING

The College of Arts and Sciences offers a range of community-based-learning courses that allow students to immerse themselves in course material and learn side-by-side with community partners. To explore justice in America, we take our students straight to the source; we offer two of our core courses in community settings — one of which (Prison, Society and You) is taught in a local prison.

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE

We bring courses to life through our annual crime and justice-themed study abroad trips. We've recently traveled to Germany, the Czech Republic, Israel, and Scandinavia. These short study tours fit easily into students' fall, winter, or spring break schedules and can also lead to full-term study abroad experiences. We have plans to expand our study tours to the Netherlands and even Kenya!
