

COVID-19 Travel Guidance: International

Getting Ready for your Co-op

Complete the process for international co-op which includes registering your co-op online, completing a waiver and attending an information session. Check with your co-op advisor for more details.

Research your location to understand the current rate of spread and local requirements or restrictions.

Understand and follow employer requirements and guidance for all workers regarding in-person and virtual participation in the co-op workplace and ensure that you can comply with safety recommendations and health protective measures (e.g., mask wearing, use of additional protective equipment if appropriate, limited size gatherings).

Manage Logistics

Review travel guidance, restrictions and recommended precautions for international travel if you are not already at home. Keep in mind the potential need to self-isolate for 14 days upon arrival.

Ensure that your living arrangements will allow you to social distance and minimize close contact with large numbers of individuals.

Investigate where you will obtain medical assistance in your location, and check that your health insurance is active for your location for the duration of the co-op.

Develop contingency plans should COVID-19 levels increase in your area and the workplace becomes more restrictive. Ensure that you will be able to continue to participate, working remotely, either remaining in the workplace location, or returning to your home.

Practice Precautionary Measures

Wear a mask

Wash your hands frequently

Maintain your distance

Monitor your health

Do not go to work; self-isolate and inform your employer.

Contact your primary care physician by phone to be evaluated for COVID-19.

Follow guidance from your physician on when you can resume working, generally 10 days after symptoms first appeared and 24 hours since last fever. Some workplaces may require negative testing for COVID-19 before returning.

Individuals who are immunocompromised may need to isolate for up to 20 days after symptoms.

If you have Covid-19 symptoms or think that you have been exposed
